POLITICS IN EDUCATION.

After seventeen years of service on the Agricultural college board, Hon.
W. S. McCormick has refused to serve any longer, although re-appointed and urged by the governor to reconsider his resignation. At the same time President Kerr of the same institution resigns, and, although he refuses to discuss his reasons now, it is understood perfectly that he retires because the board has been packed with new trustees, who were named for the express purpose of making it impossible for him to remain and preserve his self-respect.

The significance of these two resignations is plain enough. One of the state's two greatest educational institutions has been turned over to the Republican machine to be used as a political annex. The governor and his chief advisers, Spry and Callister and Anderson, have pursued President Kerr ever since the governor came into office because Kerr was not in accord with them politically, and would have none of their interference in educational affairs. Like any other educator of ability and conscience, he was against political methods in college matters, and his resignation is the sequel.

That the Agricultural college will suffer goes without saying. No such institution can retain the confidence of the people or attract desirable instructors when it is known the tenure of office and possibility of promotion depend upon political pull. No man can give a successful administration of the college who is dependent upon political favor for his appointment and retention, and is therefore obligated to manage the institution in accord with the instruction of politicians.

There has been no question of President Kerr's ability as an educator or of his extraordinary executive capacity. His administration has been successful, aggressive, untarnished; the college under his direction has established a national reputation for high-class work, and its exhibits have won distinction for the school in competition with the work of other institutions at the greatest of international exhibitions. The people of Cache county and the students of the college who know him most intimately, have supported him and the college with admirable fidelity; and those elsewhere who have had occasion to know his record have nothing but praise for the man. His only offense was a determination to keep the college out of politics and to assert his authority when necessary to preserve discipline and achieve results in the school for which he was responsible.

It is more than a shame that the mad desire of the Republican machine to punish Mr. Kerr and establish a political machine in the school should have been so successful. It is a calamity that a man of Mr. McCormick's standing, ability, devotion to the college and knowledge of its affairs should be forced to relinquish his connection with the board because a lot of pin-headed politicians had to gratify a political grudge at the expense of the college.

Having succeeded in this disorganization of one state institution it is only a short cry to the demoralization of others. The governor as a party to the plan is chiefly responsible; and it is worth noting that he has established one practice which exists in no other state in the country. One of his appointees to the Agricultural college board is also a member of the Brigham Young university board at Provo; still another of his appointees, a regent of the university, is a member of the boards of the Brigham Young university at Provo, of the Brigham Young academy at Logan, and still retains his regency of the university. A third and new appointee is named for the Agricultural college board while he is a regent of the university and this appointee is supposed to be slated to succeed Mr. McCormick as president of the Agricultural college board.

In a way these are rival institutions, two of them under state control, two of them under sectarian control. It may be that these appointees can serve all of the institutions with absolute fairness and impartiality, but propriety and a due regard for the welfare of each ought to indicate the un-wisdom of such dual services. There should be no room for question as to the singleness of purpose and entire devotion to the interests of a state institution on the part of its governors; and under the present conditions, the way is paved for suspicion that the political system introduced into one school is being extended to cover all the larger schools of the state, sectarian as well as non-sectarian.

Each state educational organization should have its own board separate and apart from connection, direct or indirect, with any other educational institution. There should be no possibility of foundation for the charge that one is being sacrificed for the benefit of the other. There should be no whisper of political influence as a factor in appointments or promotion.
The schools should be so sacred in public esteem, so consecrated to education alone that a hint of political interference would arouse a storm of indignation and repudiation at the hands of the people.

Unhappily, Governor Cutler does not seem to realize or recognize the necessity for such conditions in the state's educational system. He has permitted the demoralization of the Agricultural college, and apparently would not object to an extension of the demoralization to the university. His course in this direction alone ought to earn for him and his machine the disgust of the people, the contempt of educators and the ultimate repudiation at the polls which their action so richly deserves.

PHILIP S. MAYCOCK.

In the flower of his manhood Philip S. Maycock has been called upon to lay down his burden and cross the river, there to rest in the shade of the trees. His passing will be a source of deepest sorrow to those who knew him, for he was a man well beloved, a man valuable to the community in which he lived. Mr. Maycock was of the fine, sturdy type of manhood, the type that counts in all that makes for good citizenship, for progress in municipal affairs.

Of a kindly and gentle nature, when the need arose and he was certain that his cause was just, he could and did confront the emergency with courage.
A man of strong convictions, once his mind was made up he fought for those convictions tenaciously, and he never stopped to inquire as to the effect, upon his individual fortunes, of any battle he waged. He had only to feel sure he was right.

The announcement of Mr. Maycock's death will shock those who knew him, for his illness was of short duration.
Few of his friends knew that he was not enjoying his usual good health.
And to the widow and those bound to him by ties of blood the shock and the sorrow must be immeasurably greater. Deep and wide is the flood of sympathy that will be turned towards them. May they find comfort in the reflection that it was a blessing to have had with them for a time the man who has now gone before; theirs is a beautiful memory that will not fade as long as they are kept from joining him in the land where there is no more weeping, nor tears, nor sorrow.

"BELOW THE DEADLINE."

You don't care for detective stories, of course, but did you read the series published in The Sunday Herald and concluded some weeks ago called "Below the Deadline?" The chances are decidedly that you did. You read the first story and you became so interested that you read all the others. Surprising, isn't it, the fascination there is in stories of that kind. People who haven't read Gaboriau's stories of the great French detective, Monsieur Le-cocq, Edgar Allen Poe's mystery stories and Sir Conan Doyle's yarns about Sherlock Holmes, have something to live for.

The Herald does not pretend that the "Below the Deadline" series was as good as the work of Gaboriau, Poe and Doyle. They were very readable, however, and there were numerous inquiries, when the series was ended, about the possibility of taking it up again.
We are glad to be able to inform the interested ones that a new series will begin next Sunday. It will be called "On the Trail of Big Finger." Big Finger it will be remembered, is the arch criminal who so often eluded the cleverest plans laid by Detective Felix Boyd for his capture.

It would be telling tales out of school to give any information as to the result of the chase Boyd begins in the next issue of The Sunday Herald, but we are willing to let you share our knowledge that the new series is even more readable than the old one.

SOCIETY

Mrs. Lee Charles Miller was the hostess yesterday afternoon at a most delightful musicale given in honor of Miss Edna Bailey, who is only recently back from New York. The spacious parlors extending the full length of the house were thronged with guests, over 100 being present. The rooms were bright with spring flowers, pink tulips and pink carnations adorning the drawing room, red roses decorating the library and bright golden yellow tulips the dining room, the hallway white and green only were used, and beds of lilies of the valley were arranged on the punch table and in the alcoves.

The musical program began with two instrumental numbers, rendered exquisitely by a trio consisting of Miss Esther Allen, violin; Mrs. Walter G.
Tuttle, harp, and C. D. Schettler, cello.
They played Beethoven's "Serenade" and Lemare's "Andantino," the three instruments blending in a perfect harmony. M. J. Brines, the tenor, followed with a group of three songs, "Still We Die Night," "Songs of Araby" and "All Thro' the Night," and even his warmest admirers said his voice had never been heard to such fine advantage. Miss Edna Cohn was heard for the first time in solo work since her return from a year of study abroad, singing "A Slave Song" and Victor Harris' "Hills of Skye," in a rich, heavy contralto, which brought out the full beauty of both songs.

Interest centered, of course, in the singing of Miss Bailey, the guest of honor, whose voice had not been heard since her years of study in the east.
Miss Bailey gave as her opening number Mendelssohn's "Spring Song," and her clear, full soprano voice, was heard to good advantage. "Autumn" followed, and as a closing number she sang an old English pastoral.
But her friends clamored for more, and Miss Bailey was obliged to respond, giving Carrie Jacobs Bond's dainty song, "Still Unexpressed."

Besides giving the opening number, Mrs. Tuttle and Miss Allen both rendered solos, Mrs. Tuttle playing with feeling Goring Thomas' "Autumn" and Miss Allen a serene and Bornis's "Adoration." Miss Judith Evans added greatly to the afternoon with her excellent piano accompaniments, for all the vocalists and for Miss Allen's solos.

Altogether the affair was one of the most enjoyable ever given in the way of a private musicale. Following the program a buffet luncheon was served, and Miss Jessie Anderson served punch in the hall.

Mrs. J. R. Walker was the hostess yesterday at a luncheon at the Alta club, given in honor of her mother, Mrs. Wither Jones. The round table was arranged in the spring flowers, a handsome basket of yellow jonquills filling the central part. Place cards of the jonquills with small bunches of violets tied with violet ribbon. The guests invited to meet Mrs. Jones were Mrs. Robert Harkness, Mrs. W. H.
Bancroft, Mrs. C. C. Goodwin, Mrs. M.
S. Woodward, Mrs. T. C. Bailey, Mrs.
M. T. Bailey, Mrs. Hugh Anderson, Mrs. Ploutz, Mrs. George A. Lowe, Mrs.
Hanauer, Mrs. Thomas Weir, Mrs. Jonathan C. Royle and Mrs. Sol Siegel.

past year abroad, has returned and is again at home at the Fifth East hotel.
Mrs. Bradley and Miss Mary C. May toured Europe together, having been absent since last May. Miss May remained in Boston to study in her profession until next September, when she returns to resume her place in the university.

Mrs. T. J. Nipper gave a reception yesterday afternoon to the ladies of the Baptist church at her home on East Brigham street. The house was decorated with a profusion of flowers and palm, and the hostess was assisted by Mrs. Berkeley, Mrs. Rushmer, Mrs.
Harian, Mrs. Henry Monheim, Mr. D.
A. Brown, Mrs. Goff, Mrs. Budget, Mrs.
Sidney Smith, Mrs. Fred Jones, Mrs.
Maxfield and Mrs. C. O. Harris. An informal musical program was rendered by a number of the friends of the hostess, Miss Daisy Wolfgang singing two solos. A buffet supper was served late in the afternoon. About seventy-five of the friends of the hostess called.

The Ladies' Literary club meets this
